

News & Publications

Environmentalists Sue To Protect Salamander

4.11.12 | News
Daily Journal

R. Clark Morrison was quoted in an April 11, 2012 article about the Center for Biological Diversity, a nonprofit environmental group, suing the government in federal court, accusing it of failing to put together a plan to protect the California Tiger Salamander from dangers associated with development.

According to Morrison, development costs associated with the salamander are “really, really extraordinary.” Developers must go through a two-to-three year process in which they survey the land for the salamander, then buy off site property to set aside for the creatures, he said.

Related Professionals

Clark Morrison

Related Practice Areas

Land Use